The Challenge !

Mercedes-Benz dealerships face significant hiring challenges identifying high performing job applicants. Employees are dealers most inefficient operating variable. High turnover costs and lost sales associated with poor hiring decisions severely undermine business profitability. Conventional hiring practices that rely on intuition and guesswork need to be supplemented with data and intelligence.

The Solution 📶

PerceptionPredict conducted research with 18 dealerships in the US, and 12 dealerships in Australia, measured 60 psychographic traits and collected 2 years of performance data from 406 Sales Consultants and 114 Service Advisors.

Performance results were combined with the psychographic data via statistical analysis to establish Sales Consultant and Service Advisor productivity prediction models. Predictive traits included Playfulness & Humor, Positive Psychology Capital, Social Desirability and Work Ethic.

The Results ✓

The predictive selection algorithm developed for each job role is evidence-based and learns continuously. It enables dealer management to predict actual performance before hiring a new employee (eg. number of vehicles a candidate will sell); and creates a powerful competitive advantage that differentiates Mercedes-Benz in the market. This translates into improved sales and dealership profitability.
